Literature Review: Enhancing User Experience in Online Vacation Rental Platforms

Introduction: The advent of online platforms has transformed the landscape of travel and accommodation booking, with vacation rental websites playing a pivotal role in this evolution. This literature review explores key themes related to online vacation rental platforms, focusing on user experience, host-guest interactions, and the impact on the broader hospitality industry.

1. Evolution of Online Travel Platforms: The rise of online travel platforms has reshaped the way individuals plan and book accommodations. Studies by Xiang and Gretzel (2010) and Wang et al. (2012) highlight the shift from traditional booking methods to the convenience and accessibility offered by online platforms, with a specific emphasis on user preferences and technological advancements.
2. User Experience Design: User experience (UX) is a critical factor influencing the success of vacation rental websites. Research by Law and Buhalis (2010) and Gretzel et al. (2015) underscores the importance of intuitive interfaces, transparent information presentation, and personalized interactions in fostering positive user experiences. The incorporation of responsive design and mobile accessibility is also identified as a key aspect in enhancing user satisfaction (Xiang et al., 2015).
3. Host-Guest Interactions and Trust: The unique dynamic between hosts and guests is a defining characteristic of vacation rental platforms. Tussyadiah and Pesonen (2016) explore the role of trust in the context of peer-to-peer accommodation sharing, emphasizing the significance of online reviews and host reputation systems. Understanding the factors that contribute to trust is crucial for building a robust and reliable vacation rental community.

(2017) and Guttentag (2015), the sharing economy and collaborative consumption have presented both challenges and opportunities for hotels and traditional accommodations. This section delves into the coexistence and competition between vacation rentals and established hospitality entities.
